Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a container sealing film, more particularly to a container sealing film which is designed to be heat-melt adhesive and heat-sealing adhesive. 2. Description of the Prior Art Plastic films have found wide application in the fields of packaging materials because they offer protection from moisture, oxygen, or temperature and are biodegradable. However, the plastic films are rather difficult to open since the physical strength is poor. In order to increase the physical strength, the plastic film is usually coated with an adhesive. Nevertheless, the coating can be readily peeled off during handling and processing and thus becomes a primary factor which reduces the strength of the film. In order to solve the above problem, there is developed a material comprising a softening point plastic film coated with a heat-melt adhesive. The softening point plastic film is first attached to the metal sheet or the PET (polyethylene terephthalate) bottle to form a composite container. The composite container is subsequently heated and melted to result in a sealable
