More Americans Support Nanny State Policies Than Not A new NPR/PBS/Marist poll shows that in the wake of last year's recession and the current government shutdown, more Americans support the policies of the "nanny state" than not. According to the poll, 51 percent of all Americans support the federal government's ability to "intervene" in the markets, as is the current policy of the Obama administration. By contrast, just 45 percent of those surveyed support "the role of the federal government in regulating personal behavior." But don't panic. Though more people support the federal government "initiating change" than not, 49 percent of those surveyed say the federal government isn't already "too involved in our personal lives." Thirty-six percent of respondents said the government is "not doing enough to make us all safer," and just 31 percent said the government is "doing too many things to make us all safer." Seventy-two percent of all respondents said they believe in "the federal government's ability to help the middle class without hurting the poor."

Christian Bayne Christian Bayne (born 1984 or 1985) is a photographer, known for his photography, video and filmmaking. His work concerns the politics of life in contemporary America. Christian grew up in Sacramento, California. His photographs have been featured in numerous publications, and he has directed several short films. He lives and works in New York City. Life and work He was born in the year 1984 or 1985. In 2014, he graduated from the New York Institute of Technology, where he studied film and photography. His work deals with the politics of contemporary life in the United States. His camera is less the object of his work than the subject. From 2010 to 2011, he ran a non-profit called Our Lady Of Perpetual Government, which ran programs for free healthcare and legal aid in Atlanta, New York, and Washington, D.C. He is currently represented by International Fine Arts, Inc. In April 2011 he was "The Artist For Amnesty International" for the organization's campaign Free Stevens. In 2012, he created a multimedia installation called The Govolution, which consisted of an interactive website with audio interviews, his photos, and other videos of artists and activists being interviewed about democracy. His work has been exhibited at the New York Times Center, KKBOX, as well as venues such as MoMA PS1, the National Building Museum, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art. In February 2013, he worked with artists as well as Jeremy Scahill to produce a multimedia installation at the International Civil Liberties Monitoring Group on the Occupy movements in Albany and Syracuse. In April 2013 he joined Amnesty International in Atlanta, Georgia, for the organization's campaign Free Frederick Douglas. In 2014, he staged a self-portrait with the label of freedom on his back that was taken down by D.C. police in 2014. In 2019, he published Three Days In America: A Book of Drawing. As in his previous works, he devoted himself to showcasing an intimate portrait of America from the New York subway to an American flag that flies over the White House.
