During an attempt to determine the effect of the aqueous extract of the root of Nerium oleander on the male reproductive system of rats, ethanol extract of the aqueous extract was found to cause a reduction in sperm count and motility in rats. Thirty male rats of Wistar strain (200 g) were assigned to 6 groups (5 rats each), the saline control group was given saline (1 ml per kg body weight), and the ethanolic extract of the aqueous extract of the root of Nerium oleander was given to the extract-treated group at doses of 1.5, 4.5 and 9.0 g/kg body weight daily. The other groups were given the aqueous extract at the above doses.

The rats were killed at the end of 35 days, and serum testosterone, luteinising hormone and follicle-stimulating hormone were estimated. A spokeswoman for Human Rights Watch said the group believes the girl was "kidnapped from her home in her village near Thodi in Central Equatoria State, forced across the international border with South Sudan and taken to the United States." She was taken to a hospital in Iowa where the girl and her parents were forced to sign a document "in English" even though they speak only Dinka, a language that is not widely understood in the U.S. The girl was sent home after being kept in the hospital against her will and her mother told to "go back where she came from." The rights group says the girl was healthy when she was taken. Officials at the child's school said that the baby was sick when she was taken away. What's new:

A real-life weapons test from the wilds of Hawaii Chris King The Y2K madness had long since abated, but that wasn't quite the case with the U.S. Army. In a corner of Hawaii, military scientists were developing new weapons to use on their target — the ooze-filled heart of a selfreplicating time machine known as the SHOGUN.
Every second the machine spent in that skin-bursting whirlpool of thrashing neutrinos for one second more was a second that the SHOGUN would gain strength. If it should succeed— if it could capture and build a copy of its creator—then the end of the world as humanity knew it would occur. Right now, a bomb would be detonated just to the side of the machine, creating a gigantic shock wave that would release a number of mini-SHOGUNs into the world. God only knew what would happen. "If the SHOGUN is the Armageddon of the future, then this is the Big Bang," the scientists told reporters. "And the big question, once the building is clear, is, 'Do we believe there is a peaceful future for this world?' Far up the slopes of the Hawaiian volcano, Operation Blue Max entered its final days. Black-and-white photographs were passed around. In one the leader of the team was shown, red-eyed, furious. No one would dare call it a grin. In another the great penis of the machine pulsed with open delight. The "re-entry vehicle," packed with the cake of high explosives necessary to make the large-scale time machine reachable, was successfully lowered into the crater and wedged securely into place. In the middle of the crater a submersible vehicle sat, lightly coated with the lava of long-dead supervolcanos, hooded by massive support columns. And on top of that, a bleary-eyed MP from the U.S. Army, Tommy Blackburn, blasted the mission's personal email address into the sky. "The SHOGUN is in the building, and we're gonna blow it up," he called at 2 a.m. "If some of you lads fancy staying home rather than going out there, that's up to you." Out in the countryside, men with packs and rifles lay amid the dormant volcanoes of the Big Island, ready for a fight they hoped would never come.
