The game seems pretty interesting. Give it a shot! It has a nice visual design and soundtrack, plus there is a pretty solid RPG aesthetic to the game. The story is also really interesting. I really love the concept that you play the hero of your own story. The worst feature, of course, is the sheer amount of matchmaking lobbies that are available, forcing you to try and find a lobby with that specific minimum number of players for you to enter. Still, the game has potential and could be great, but I really wish that wasn't so. This isn't like my own issue with Skyrim's dedicated servers, where the game simply doesn't have the gameplay capacity to handle 20 players, or even 8 players. Instead, you get about a dozen players. It's barely enough players to make the game worthwhile. It's a pity, as Elden Ring certainly has the potential to be a truly stellar RPG. And because of it's matchmaking issues, we never get to find out just how good the game could be. Elden Ring is a new fantasy action RPG that uses the Unreal 4 engine. The story revolves around a hero who is dabbling in the Lands Between and a girl who was transported there as well. The demo includes a few different areas to explore and collect materials from. It's hard to say if the game is any good based on a demo, but if you want to try it out for yourself, you can snag it off of Steam. A bit of a bizarre decision to post a demo of a game you've already talked about, but here you go. As a twin of PCLudey Overwhelmingly Positive PCLudey -- PROS: Good visuals for a MUD-style game. Huge world to explore. You will appreciate that. Good level design. Good variety in gameplay. You can customize your character to your liking. CONS: The multiplayer is awkward. The matchmaking system is horrendous. CONS: The story is a bit goofy at times. Overall, this is a good game. Pick it up. (The) -- GAMEPLAY PCLudey (3.5/4) -- STORY PCLudey bff6bb2d33

Genomic defects of neutralizing epitopes of HSV-1 UL37 gene in cell lines persistently infected with HSV-1 strains differing in gp47/gH? To investigate the causes of differences between cell lines persistently infected with HSV-1 strains differing in their glycoprotein E (gE) content, viral neutralizing epitopes of DeltagH subunit and other UL37 gene products were determined. The characterization of the epitopes in strain ANG607 revealed that they were comprised of gE, gG, gp48, gI, gD and gH subunits but GP47 was missing. The epitope of gH in strain 19DSH (major deletion of gH) is comprised of gD, gH-1 and gI subunits, but that of both the DeltagH and the 19DSH (minus gE) variants of strain Z29 is comprised of gE only. Wild-type strains isolated from conjunctiva (FC63, G, FRE and FRE-NV), genitalia (17, SN27), skin (97BS and 107); non-epitopositive strains isolated from genitalia: VG47, F and FNL; non-epitopositive strains isolated from CNS: E and TH621 produced different viral neutralizing polypeptides from HSV-1 strains Z29 and 19DSH (polypeptide c and d, respectively). Since transient expression of the gE gene in lymphoblastoid B95-8 cells partially restored expression of neutralizing epitopes against HSV-1 strains Z29, 19DSH and E, it was assumed that the absence of cell line-specific expression of these antibodies was due to specific impairments of messenger RNA, and not polymerase stalling and slippage during replication. It was concluded that expression of viral neutralizing epitopes of gH and not gE correlated with the presence of cell line-specific neutralizing antibodies in the human populations. This
