Goals on the way to the final frontier 2 years, 1 month ago Welcome to 2019 and my personal goals for the year! In 2018 I changed my career to design and print production. It wasn't an easy transition. The burning ambition of a designer who can create and knows what it feels like to make my own mark on the field comes with a strong ambition to prove my knowledge and skills. After 3 years of working within a technological and mechanised industry I felt at odds with myself. I finally decided to jump on the trendy tech train and do a 21 week journey down the path of the digital designer - bringing my own skills up to scratch and testing myself in print design from concept to print to distribution. A funny thing happened in the middle: I fell in love. I fell in love with making and seeing my designs on paper and metal. When I'm in love with what I'm making, it feels good. And when I felt good I got busy with my goals. Goals I made to pass by. Goals I fell out of love with. Goals which were unrealistic that only one person in the whole world could achieve. I wanted to reach the top of this industry. I wanted to put myself as a leading name in the industry and make a one in a million success. When I finally realised that I couldn't get there without a basic understanding of design, I wanted to learn it. I wanted to understand the history of typography, illustration and a multitude of other design disciplines. Before I started working in the industry that's how I spent my time - studying. I'm certain that it's helped me attain the knowledge I need for this ever-changing and exciting industry. Today I'm striving to get even further down the checklist. Beyond knowing how to make websites and design brochures, I want to be a web and mobile developer. I understand that there's a large gap between knowing how to design and printing something and publishing it digitally - so I've started a blog
