The clients that click around and don’t want to do what they’re told. The clients that don’t do their job. I never had any doubts on number three. I’m sure there are a few other people who would claim they have no doubts about that, but my experience has been that if I tell people “do as I say” or “don’t do as I say” that most of them will do as I say. But what happened when I said “do as I say” to the clients who were the problem on the third item (the ones that didn’t do their job)? I had to do it twice. They did it once, but the second time I was looking at the wrong place. I had them repeat what they were going to do and when I gave them the link to the page they were supposed to fill in, they didn’t
