If you bought 2010 Office Premium ($55.Q: No swap space available I am running Ubuntu 14.04 LTS and upon booting this morning I received the following error: No swap space available. Swap is currently disabled. I had previously added the swap drive using the following command: sudo swapoff -a sudo swapon -a I have restarted numerous times but I do not know if there is anything else I need to do. A: You should have a partition for swap space and a partition for Ubuntu. When you installed your Ubuntu you could either set a partition for Ubuntu or you could choose to use an entire free partition. If you chose to use the entire partition then by default Ubuntu set the partition to use as a partition for swap space. I guess that what happened in your case is that you didn't have any swap space or at least that you didn't allocate it to Ubuntu. Thus when you installed Ubuntu you didn't have any swap partition and you set a partition for Ubuntu. That partition has now been reserved for swap space and upon reboot you get the message of no swap space available. So the solution to this is: To allocate a partition for swap space. To do this you should open Gparted on the Ubuntu and choose the partition for swap space from the top menu, choose change. to allocate as much swap space as you need. To allocate swap space you will have to choose how much swap space you want. For example to allocate 12 gigabytes of swap space you could choose the following: Click on the green plus e79caf774b
