Ask HN: What is your dream job? - brw12 In my dream job I'd be a developer in a startup, preferably doing something related to hardware, like.NET, embedded devices, linux, etc. I think startup jobs are vastly underrated and I have a hunch I'll like it better than my current job. ===== stcredzero I'd love to be making a game of my own from the ground up. Like, such a deep game, it's got narrative, political and social elements, it's got AI, it's adaptable to endless player customization and it's in 3d. It's in a genre dubbed "Robots, and Cats, and Dogs..." ~~~ brw12 That's a good idea. It's interesting you say it has social aspects, because I've been looking into doing the same, but in a different genre. I wonder about that balance as well as scaling up the depth of gameplay. ----- johnnyAghands I'm a developer working at a small non-tech company. I really don't like it because it's not what I do. I've thought about becoming a business owner, but I have a hard time seeing things like money or laying people off. Would I be having a harder time as a business owner if I had this dream job? Or is it just the difficulty of switching careers? ~~~ brw12 It's difficult to switch careers. If you love doing what you're doing now, you won't love what you do in a startup - and startups tend to be more like temping than full-time employment. As for money -
