Intermolecular triarylamine-mediated synthesis of two-dimensional metal-organic-covalent-organic frameworks. The assembly of two-dimensional covalent-organic-frameworks (2D COFs) from metal-organic covalent-organic (MOC) cores is an effective approach to construct novel structures. Herein, by replacing one of the ditopic ligands in MOC cores with triarylamine, 2D triarylamine-mediated covalent-organic-frameworks (TMACOFs) are facilely obtained. In a different embodiment, the computer system includes a first and second CPU. The first CPU is coupled to a first memory, and the second CPU is coupled to a second memory. The method includes the step of loading the first memory with a first application and the second memory with a second application. The method also includes the step of causing the first application to be executed and the second application to be executed. The method further includes the step of causing the first application to receive input parameters from a user, causing the second application to receive input parameters from the user, and causing the first application to store the input parameters in the first memory. The method further includes the step of causing the second application to store the input parameters in the second memory. The method further includes the step of writing the input parameters from the first memory to the second memory, and reading the input parameters from the second memory into the first memory.

Biography Mother Emily Mother Emily Emily Brady, mom of five and grandmother of six, was born in rural Butler County, Pa. in 1925. In 1947, she moved to Galion, Ohio to be with her husband, John, when he was called to duty in the Armed Forces and went to work as a census taker. A single mother, Emily raised her children alone and still raised her children alone later in life when her husband passed away. Emily had been writing for years and was encouraged by her sister to start writing her own short stories and start a creative writing class. She has lived with Alzheimer's disease for a few years now and is deeply engaged in the 12-step program. On May 7, Alan Gregovski, a 12-year-old boy from Council Bluffs, IA, spent part of his May Day weekend at Camp Victory-Djibouti, the U.S. base in Djibouti that has become a forward operating have the power to decide whether they want to be hit by the pope. POPE FRANCIS HAS BECOME a statistic in the NYPD crime report. Every day, the daily average of 1,201 crimes against the clergy climbed 25.3 percent through June, compared with the same period in 2016. The jump was most conspicuous in Brooklyn, where the overall number of crimes against clergy increased by 54.8 percent. Neighborhoods with large numbers of Hispanic Catholics, especially in the Bronx, also saw substantial increases. Late last week, however, the trend reversed as the reported number of crimes against clergy fell by 20.5 percent over the last two days of June, dropping to a total of 1,176, according to the NYPD's statistics. The same can't be said about some of the more famous crimes, though. A thief broke into a Brooklyn loft through a window and stole two pieces of St. Catherine's art. He was arrested this week, but this past weekend, another thief broke into a Manhattan loft through a window and stole four pieces of art, and the victim was shocked that the police didn't do anything. We're talking about St. Peter's art, a pope who denied Christ three times, and a church that isn't exactly known for its protection of the arts. The FBI has investigated more than 93,000 thefts of religious and other art since 1990. Of the 190 cases that were resolved as of May, 2015, less than 2 percent resulted in convictions. Which is a shame, since there are almost no laws that protect stolen religious art. Here's the problem: The penalty for theft of art, even antique art that's worth under $5,000, is the same as the penalty for theft of other goods, up to two years in prison and a $10,000 fine. To add to the insult, the value of art doesn't count as a "definite value." But it does count as "indefinite value," meaning that the accused can be charged with larceny. Theft of art is nothing new, of course. According to John McClure, archivist for the Catholic University of America, we've been stealing art from churches and other religious institutions since, well, since religious institutions were institutions, going all the way back to the first civilizations. Some of the
