“If we capture data from real-life players running at high speeds, including those with a lot of complexity in their movements, it can be used to better understand the game and simulate more realistic player movement and motion,” said David Rutter, General Manager, FIFA.

“Players who have put on a motion capture suit to capture real-life players running in matches are not only extremely demanding, but they also give us invaluable data to better understand and simulate the way players move and play in a match, and this is the most advanced set of data in the history of FIFA.” View photos “We are incredibly excited to be partnering with EA SPORTS on this unique collaboration,” said Joey Barton, Founder and CEO of MotionStage. “This partnership is really the first of its kind and we are proud to be first with the new, revolutionary HyperMotion technology. The data we collect from real-life footballers is helping to create the most realistic football games ever and we are looking forward to seeing what FIFA 22 has to offer in the near future!” In addition to this partnership, MotionStage will also include a partnership with the German Football Association (DFB) in order to capture and collect data from professional football players playing in live matches. Furthermore, this data will be used as a base to better understand the game and also to train players at FIFA's eight test centers, including the FIFA test center in Dubai. The new video highlights show the motion capture data from the FIFA test center in Dubai, which will feature two cameras that capture the motion of players as they run in a full-court scrimmage format. These two cameras will be motion tracked by motion capture suits worn by specially-trained FIFA players, and the resulting data will be used to develop FIFA in the coming months. FIFA and EA SPORTS announced their new HyperMotion® technology partnership to better understand the game and create more realistic player movement. View photos HyperMotion allows FIFA to integrate all the movement information captured by all motion capture players in the world, so there are only two key issues that can pose a challenge: capturing motion at high speeds, and capturing motion in lower volumes of space. FIFA addresses the first challenge through its close ties with a variety of elite sporting clubs, equipping them with motion capture suits. The second challenge is addressed by the truly global motion capture player pool that MotionStage enables, and is a game-ch

Football (association football), commonly known as soccer to non-North Americans,[1] is a team sport played between two teams of eleven players with a spherical ball. It is one of the world's most popular sports, and the FIFA franchise is the best-selling sports video game series of all time. It is often considered to be the premier soccer series of all time. The game is played by millions of fans around the world with over two billion video game sales. Fierce competition between FIFA video game series video game developers such as EA Sports and Konami Gaming (which, after its acquisition by Konami, now produces the FIFA series for EA Sports), has defined the genre for more than three decades. EA Sports FIFA titles have won numerous awards for the series, from Sony PlayStation's 2006 game of the year to the 2017 FIFA series winning the inaugural Golden Joystick Award for the best sports game in the world. In the same year, EA Sports FIFA series was also awarded Sports Game of the Year in the Interactive Achievement Awards. FIFA series games are often credited with starting the current generation of sports games and have evolved to be the benchmark for sports video games. The franchise was initially created by Alex Evans and Andy Edwin of EA

Canada, and is headquartered in Burnaby, BC, Canada. FIFA is the English name of the Finnish word for football, while "soccer" is also a common name for the sport in many countries. History FIFA series games have been regarded as some of the most popular and influential in the history of video games. Many of these success drivers can be attributed to the games' early status as a cult favorite among video game fans. The first game, FIFA Soccer in North America and Europe for the Sony PlayStation, was developed by EA Canada and released worldwide on November 22, 1995. This game's development is partly attributed to EA's being the first publisher to release a sports video game for North America, at the time, and had a big part in the success of the series. In the same year, the year that followed, EA Sports Soccer in Europe and in Europe was released for the Sony PlayStation. EA published their FIFA Soccer '96 for the Sony PlayStation in 1996. In 1997, EA Sports released FIFA '97 for Sony PlayStation, and the year after, EA published FIFA '98 for Sony PlayStation. In the year 1999, EA Sports released FIFA 99 bc9d6d6daa
