When you first start the game, you will be able to choose your class and special skill, and the background story will begin. After that, you will begin to travel with other adventurers. You can talk with other people in the field, trade items, and go on quests. You can also set up a band, form a party, form a guild, or form your own clan. Equipment Items are classified by their durability and material. Durable items can be enhanced by using items that can be used to create enhancements that have a permanent effect, giving you a variety of weapons, armor, and magic. Materials can be used to create enhancements that are temporary, such as increasing attack power or restoring HP. When you use a magic item, a percentage is deducted from your MP. You can use special skills such as the command skill or special attacks to restore your MP, and there are also items that have a special effect. Enhanced Items You can create unique weapons, armor, and magic items from materials obtained from quests or collected through combat and using the Craft skill. You can enhance existing items, or combine materials to create new items that are never used in the world. When you create a unique item, the level required to create it will be indicated in the center of the item's symbol. Durable Items Durable items are items that can be enhanced and gained through the use of items that can be used to create enhancements. However, these items will be invalidated if enhancement is used on them more than once. Whether you enhance a weapon with the use of an item that cannot create enhancements, or enhance a weapon with the use of a material, enhancement costs 20 MP. You must rest for 8 hours after using enhancement, and must have consumed at least one Girdle of Omniblade to enhance a weapon. While you are in battle, you will not lose the durability of your weapon even if you enhance it. There is no limit to the number of times you can enhance weapons with the use of items that can be used to create enhancements. However, if you enhance weapons more than once, your weapon will be invalidated. After you use the transformation items that can be used to create new weapons and armor to change weapon and armor enhancements, weapons and armor enhancements will be changed to weapons and armor that are in level 1. Equipment items and materials can be traded with others by sending them to the negotiation window that

The present invention relates to scanning exposure methods and apparatus for use in production of very large scale integrated circuits (VLSI) and, more particularly, to scanning apparatus having two opposed semiconductor wafers vertically positioned on movable wafer stages that are scanned in a predetermined pattern and separated therefrom during scanning to effect exposure of respective portions of the semiconductor wafers. Various scanning exposure methods and apparatus have been proposed and are currently used for a variety of production of very large scale integrated circuits. One example of conventional scanning exposure apparatus is disclosed in U.S. patent application Ser. No. 685,600 filed Apr. 12, 1976, now U.S. Pat. No. 4,074,936, by Yoshihiro Mochizuki. That apparatus employs a movable support for horizontally positioning two light sources on which respective regions of a single exposure wafer are sequentially irradiated and a movable stage with a single exposure wafer coupled thereto. The stage is reciprocated vertically by a stepping motor in synchronism with the horizontal movement of a projection mask associated therewith to thereby scan the respective regions of the exposure wafer. The two light sources are comprised of a quartz lamp and a tungsten lamp for forming two sets of linear and symmetrical beams having respective regions of the exposure wafer alternately therebetween and a single scanning exposure operation is undertaken with the stage in moving one step for each alternate beam exposure. As disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 3,990,346, there is already proposed a scanning exposure apparatus which uses two movable Z-axis stages each with a separate light source, each Z-axis stage reciprocating

Howdy fellow brother. When I run the patch now, it doesn't work. It shows "Converting world" and the main menu stays "Main Menu". Any suggestion?

By the way, if you are on a mobile browser (Chrome), make sure you press "Google" in the top right corner to exit the game.
