so sorry for my bad english A: Excel objects are buried under the Application object. They are not given space in the application object unless they are ActiveX controls. Where you added them would be dependent on where you put them. If you are looking at them through Windows Forms, you should probably use a PictureBox or a Label. If you are looking at the data through a data viewer, you might use a ListView. If you are looking at the values in a TableView, you are going to have to find a TDataSource to feed the data to. Added as an edit: This is for VBA. You would have to look for the VBA equivalent for the ActiveX object in Excel. Bitcoin investors just asked their government for a bailout. “We are deeply concerned that the government may use Regulation A+ as an excuse to engage in central planning, and we are opposed to that,” said James A. Angel, president and founder of Angel Capital Group. “We think it is an ideological play,” said Angel. “It’s a play to inject these people with confidence and to make them feel like they are in control of their own assets.” Regulation A+ was designed to make it easier for smaller companies to raise money through initial public offerings. The Securities and Exchange Commission, fearing the power the new system would give, formed a task force to study the proposal. The task force’s final report recommended the SEC not approve Regulation A+, saying it would harm the greater public interest. It’s unlikely the SEC will now reverse its position and approve Regulation A+. A bailout is certainly politically popular. You can imagine the outpouring of support from lawmakers if they were to announce that they were going to approve a massive bailout for bailouts. More government intervention would be far more appealing to elected officials than one of the least popular public policies in recent memory 6d1f23a050
