Chander Pahar Bengali Movie.An interprofessional simulation experience to increase knowledge and confidence in self-care and respiratory education. Complex medical conditions that require chronic or critical disease management often include both acute and self-care needs. The nurses who are the primary care providers of health care to individuals with such complex care needs must be knowledgeable in self-care and respiratory therapy as well as providing respiratory care. The objectives of this investigation were to determine if, through simulation experience, the knowledge and confidence in self-care/respiratory care technician (RCT) participants of this interprofessional simulation study. The educational intervention was an interprofessional simulation experience using video/audio-based learning activities. The post-test (pretest and post-test) knowledge and confidence scores of the participants in the RN and RCT groups were statistically significantly increased after the simulation experience of the RCT participants also resulted in statistically significantly increased knowledge and confidence in self-care/respiratory care. This investigation demonstrated the ability of an interprofessional simulation experience to improve the knowledge and confidence of RNs and RCTs. The simulation experience was more effective when the students were part of an interprofessional team.
